ARAK

Arak is a traditional Lebanese alcoholic beverage typically served in small glasses and consumed with mezze platters. It's distilled from grape vines and left to ferment in barrels for three weeks. The easy production process is a source of pride to local villagers who boast about their homemade "arak baladeh". The making of arak is a family affair, with secrets passed from one generation to another. Central to the process is a triple distillation using a still called a "karakeh" in Arabic.

The harvest is in September and October. The grapes are crushed and left to ferment for three weeks. The mix is put in the lower part of the karakeh, where it is heated until it evaporates and cooled in the top part by a stream of cold water. At this stage, it is pure alcohol. Anise and water may be added in the second or third distillation. The mix is what makes each house's taste unique.

Arak is a staple of Sunday meals. With a sweet taste and high alcohol content about 40% it's best consumed with food, lots of it. That makes it perfect for Lebanon's traditional meze spreads of never-ending small dishes that family and friends linger over for hours. Some prefer half water, half arak a strong, sweet mix, usually not for the newbies. More common is one-third arak to two-thirds water to prolong the drinking and the gathering. Ice is another discussion. For some, the glass is filled with ice cubes before pouring the drink. Those truly religious about the drink insist that ice must come last. will be delighted to assist you with recommendations to meet your choice.

Ksarak - Arak de Château Ksara

This pure grape alcohol is redistilled in a specially designed alembic in France with the aniseed. The spirit is refined to release the purest and healthiest Arak. Ksarak is matured for two years in clay jars manufactured in Beit Chebab following ancestral norms. Recommended to share with friends and family, served in traditional glasses with mineral water and ice to give the perfect serve.
